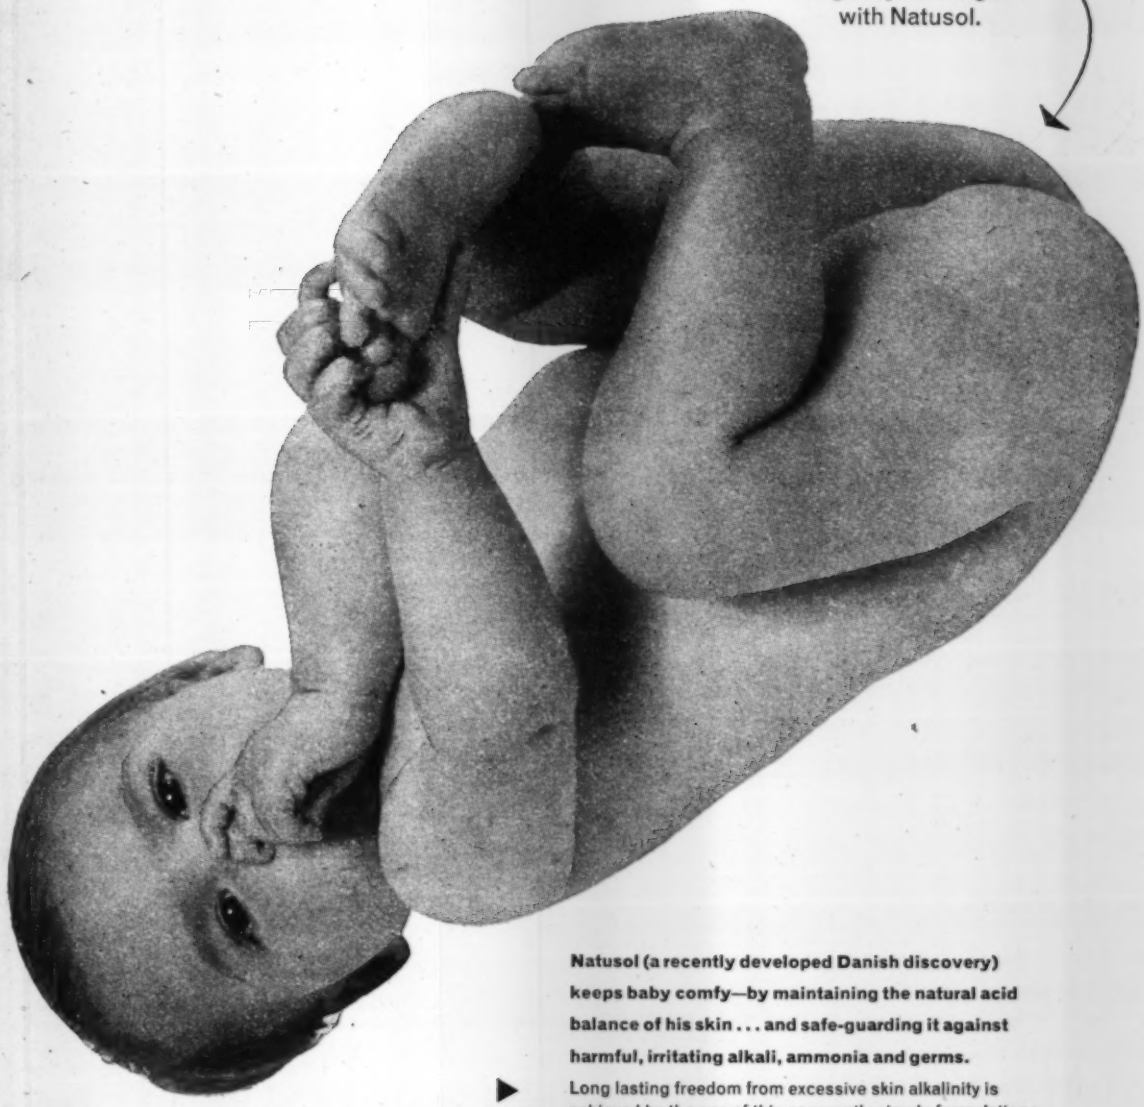
napkin rash (urinary ammonia dermatitis) appears when the natural acid balance of baby's skin is upset.

napkin rash disappears (or won't even start) if baby's is gently massaged with Natusol.



Natusol (a recently developed Danish discovery) keeps baby comfy—by maintaining the natural acid balance of his skin . . . and safe-guarding it against harmful, irritating alkali, ammonia and germs.

Long lasting freedom from excessive skin alkalinity is achieved by the use of this apparently simple formulation: Acid Boric 2.85, Borax 0.15, Glycer. 10.62, Paraff. Liq. 10, Paraff. Moll. Alb. 55.2, Adeps Lan. 20.

For more detailed information regarding Natusol apply to THOS KERFOOT & CO. LTD., (Dept., NT), Vale of Bardsley, Ashton-under-Lyne.

DEVON

Devon is the second largest county in England. Its northern coastline is famous for the majestic beauty of the cliffs, whilst the south coast has been described as the English Riviera. Devon has a number of popular seaside resorts and scattered over the county are many villages of rare old-world charm. In the cities and larger towns are modern shops, cinemas, etc. thus, it will be seen that interests and recreational facilities can be provided to suit all tastes.

It is fitting that the hospitals in the County, with their training facilities and varied opportunities for experience, should provide all that is best in the hospital world.

Flats for Nurses?

SHOULD FLATS be made available for nurses and other hospital staff so that they can live an independent existence instead of being forced to live in a nurses home or similar building with communal facilities?

This question will be discussed at the annual meeting of the Association of Hospital Management Committees in June; it is the subject of a resolution by the Lambeth HMC.

It seems likely that a hospital in a busy city able to offer rentable accommodation to all its staff in flats of various sizes might well find an end to its staff shortages. The practice is not unknown in other countries and, on a small scale, it is carried out in several London hospitals. Apart from the fact that housing is still a national problem, numbers of older hospital sisters are being forced to give up their employment in order to look after elderly relatives.

The recent Ministry building notes on Accommodation for Nursing Staff* suggested that ward sisters should be given a bed-sitting-room 140 feet square. This means that a mature woman, in a professional, responsible position, will be expected to live (and presumably entertain her friends) in one room, 10 ft. by 14 ft. Admittedly she will be able to take her meals, when off duty, in the hospital dining-room, but this can hardly be described as living an independent life.

If she could live in a flat at an economic rent (and where she could, if necessary, bring an elderly parent to live) she might be a more contented and happier woman, quite possibly save the State the care of a geriatric patient and at the same time pursue her own career usefully.

The problem of the care of the elderly is one that affects the spinsters of this country perhaps more than any other group of people; there can be few matrons who have not lost valued hospital sisters because they have had to go home to look after relatives. With suitable accommodation available on the spot such losses might well be avoided.

The hospital service seems unable, at present, to compete in conditions of service with many other occupations. For the medical and nursing staff, whose prime responsibility the 24-hour service is, the availability of accommodation at an economic rent might well make a great difference to its attraction. It has been estimated that subsidized nursing accommodation costs the country about £6 million a year. The nurses homes that are half empty (but must be heated and kept in order) show that the trend is towards non-residence. But in big cities it is still too difficult and too costly for many. Rentable accommodation may well be the answer.

News and Comment

At the meeting of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council on April 11, the Management Side rejected the Negotiating Committee's proposals for improved salaries for assistant matrons/assistant chief male nurses and senior assistant matrons/senior assistant chief male nurses in psychiatric hospitals. The Negotiating Committee is to seek the advice of the full Staff Side on future action.

Stop Press—Melbourne

MLLE ALICE CLAMAGERAN, president of the French Nurses' Association, has been elected the new President of ICN. As expected, great controversy centred at the ICN Congress on the interpretation of 'a professional nurse' eligible for membership of ICN. UK firmly opposed the amendment which asked for all members to have had a general training; both Miss Powell and Miss Udell spoke against the amendment referring to the years of devoted service that had been given here by nurses on specialized parts of the Register. The UK was unwilling to deny these nurses full membership of ICN. New Zealand and India supported UK. Miss Ruth Sleeper submitted an addendum that the whole question be deferred until the Education Committee had fully investigated the extent of the problem. The discussion continued in a tense atmosphere and the amendment was finally carried with a footnote that 'after 1965 all nurses qualifying be expected to have had a generalized training.' The president said that this footnote nullified the Helsinki resolution. At present countries with specialized trainings can retain full membership.

The Census in Hospitals

THE 16TH CENSUS OF GREAT BRITAIN will take place at midnight on Sunday, April 23. Responsibility for completing the forms in hospitals will rest with the 'chief resident officer or other person for the time being in charge of each hospital', even though the work may be delegated. Circular (HM (61) 26) will help hospitals deal with the census forms.

Committee on the Nursing Profession

THE WELSH RHB's committee to investigate the recruitment and status of nurses and midwives under the chairmanship of Mr. C. N. D. Cole, director of the Western Mail and Echo, has set up four working subcommittees. Meanwhile the Confederation of Health Service Employees (which, of course, has representation on the Staff Side of the Whitley Council and on the Negotiating Committee) has declared its intention of asking for a Royal Commission at the next TUC Congress.

The Drift from Hospitals

A LEADING ARTICLE in The Times, on the treatment of mothers during childbirth, was criticized last week by Miss E. I. O. Adamson, matron of the Western General Hospital, Edinburgh, in a letter to that paper. 'Everyone will agree', she wrote, '. . . that there is room for improvement . . . but the sweeping criticism with which this matter has been publicized is unlikely to provide a panacea.' The article, Miss Adamson said, failed to give the other side of the picture which shows nurses attempting to deal with heavy spells of work under conditions often as outdated as the 'dead hand of hospital routine'. 'Today's attack should be coupled with the problem of staffing . . . The drift away from hospitals, as well as maternity units, is in urgent need of investigation if patients are to fare, in the hands of qualified nurses, even as badly as described in your article.'

Hospital Planning

MRS. JEAN HEYWARD, S.R.N., R.M.N., has been appointed part-time nursing officer on hospital planning and equipment at the Ministry of Health from early July. Until recently Mrs. Heyward was with the Division of Architectural Studies, Nuffield Provincial Hospital Trust, taking part in research of 'the nursing function'. She was an inspector of training schools (mental nursing) to the General Nursing Council before going to the Nuffield Trust in 1951 where she was closely associated with planning and development of the experimental hospital units in Scotland and Belfast.

12th QUADRENNIAL CONGRESS, ICN

BOARD OF DIRECTORS' MEETING, WELLINGTON

FOR THREE DAYS members of the ICN Board of Directors, representing 30 national nurses' associations, met in conference to discuss some of the major matters calling for action and decision in Melbourne.

Dues

The supportive attitude expressed when an increase in the per capita dues was suggested gave encouragement that the plans envisaged for extending the services of ICN were realistic and valuable. The smaller member associations declared their intention of contributing the full amount.

Membership

Thirteen national nurses' associations had applied for membership, reported Miss Eli Magnussen (Denmark) and she recommended their acceptance by the Grand Council in Melbourne.

International Student Nurses Unit

For the first time applications for membership to the International Student Nurses Unit were received: three countries had applied and these would be recommended for acceptance.

Nursing Service Division

Miss Frances Beck spoke of the concern in many areas suffering from the shortage of nurses over the employment of nursing auxiliary personnel and the selection of duties appropriate to their skill and instruction. 'Basic nursing care is still the essence of nursing service', declared Miss Beck.

Florence Nightingale Education Division

The report presented by Miss Ellen Broe, director, indicated the ever-widening concern that nursing education should be the best possible preparation for nurses to meet the needs of nursing service, both today and in the future. This entailed constant study and research. International seminars were proving of great value and interest and the recent seminar on research in Delhi had been of far-reaching importance. Headquarters provided an advisory and consultative service which was being more and more widely used. Nurses from six countries served on the education committee; being in widely separated areas of the world each could make a valuable contribution in assisting education projects adapted to the special needs of each region.

CONGRESS CABLES FROM MELBOURNE

SUNDAY, APRIL 16, in brilliant sunshine, saw 2,000 nurses attend a special service at the Anglican Cathedral of St. Paul in Melbourne. At the same time 1,000 nurses were attending Mass at the nearby Roman Catholic Cathedral Church of St. Patrick.

At St. Paul's the lesson was read by Miss Agnes Ohlson, president, ICN, and Miss Daisy Bridges read the International Code of Nursing Ethics.

The Archbishop of Melbourne, the Most Rev. Frank Woods, preached the sermon, taking for his text 'I am among you as he that serveth.' The lead given to nurses by Florence Nightingale had recalled the world to a sense of vocation and reaffirmed the importance of the foundation of a good character in any training. The Archbishop ended by saying that the standards of nursing could only be guaranteed by those prepared to serve.

On Monday morning, after greetings by Miss Ohlson, the Congress was opened by Sir Dallas Brooke, in the presence of many distinguished visitors. Miss Gladys Schott, welcoming members, reminded them of the history of this young country and its links with Florence Nightingale and the Nightingale Training School.

An impressive ceremony—a roll call of the 44 countries' delegates—followed in the afternoon. It was announced that two items on the Grand Council agenda were to be withdrawn. They were the one referring to the proposed conference of nursing journal editors and the one regarding the method by which the consent of candidates is obtained in connection with nominations for ICN officers and members of standing committees.

As we go to press the Congress is still going on; next week we shall be publishing further news and some of the many tributes that, throughout the whole week, have been paid to Miss D. C. Bridges, C.B.E., who will be retiring at the end of the Congress as general secretary of the ICN.

Diet Therapy and the Nurse

Dietitian's Viewpoint

M. E. CAREY, B.Sc., London University Academic Postgraduate Diploma in Dietetics, Chief Dietitian, St. George's Hospital, London

Diets are not something extra; they replace what the patient would have anyway, namely food. In this article a dietitian and a ward sister discuss dietetics from the angle of the nurse as well as the patient.

IT IS REGRETTABLE that the development of dietetics as a special subject has in many cases tended to take therapy outside the immediate province of many nurses. It may be argued that if dietetics has become a speciality, then it can be left to those who wish to specialize; yet good nutrition is one of the foundations of good health, and nutritional knowledge can benefit the nurse personally, and in her ability to advise others in the right choice of foods. It is all too easy for a nurse in training to feel that the whys and wherefores of dietetics in the ward are not her direct concern, but later in her career she may work at another hospital where, in the absence of any special dietetic service, she is expected to cope and to provide all the necessary liaison between doctor, patient and caterer.

The dietetic treatment of in-patients has many aspects: therapy, with its scientific background; catering, implying the provision of varied, appetizing meals at reasonable cost; and last but by no means least, the need of patients for a diet which is suited to the individual.

A very few hospitals have a complete dietetic service, run by a highly organized dietetic department, in which all responsibility for the provision and service of meals to patients on special diets is taken out of the hands of the nursing staff. Many other hospitals are without a dietetic department or without even the advice of a dietitian, so that provision and service of meals for special diet patients in these hospitals is the responsibility of the nursing staff, who must be able to tell the caterer exactly what is required for each special diet. Most hospitals in this country are without dietetic advice.

Dietetics—a Specialized Subject

Earlier in this century, the special feeding of a sick patient was regarded as almost exclusively the province of the doctor and nurse. Great increase in nutritional knowledge, and its subsequent application to diet therapy, resulted in the development of dietetics as a specialized subject, and posed the problem of who was going to interpret this new knowledge for the benefit of the patient. This would be carried out most successfully by someone with a blend of medical, catering and scientific knowledge, with the ability to correlate these different aspects and to teach basic nutrition.

Since 1936, when the British Dietetic Association was formed, the types of courses open to student dietitians have reflected the different aspects of the work. Short courses have been available to people who are already qualified in nursing, science, nutrition, domestic science or catering. Recently, integrated courses have been introduced in which training can be taken in three to four years, in place of the four to four-and-a-half years required for the two-part courses. It has not yet proved possible to have one national course of training in dietetics, although this may come in the future.

The Patient's—and the Nurse's—Angle

The system of in-patient dietetics whereby literally everything needed is sent ready prepared from the dietetic department labelled for the individual patient does ensure that, in so far as is humanly possible, the patient actually receives what has been ordered. On the other hand, special diets from the nursing angle cease to be regarded as a simple modification of normal nutrition, part of the treatment of a specific disease, and can all too easily become 'what the diet kitchen has sent,' something to be given to the patient, much as tablets and mouthwashes are given.

At the other extreme, in hospitals with no specialized dietetic advice, the nursing staff may be left with such problems as interpreting the doctor's instructions from calories or milligrams into acceptable dishes for the individual; giving the necessary information to the caterer, seeing that the expected dishes arrive and are eaten; and in some cases teaching some elementary nutrition to patients and adapting the diet for the patient to follow at home. All this is no easy matter, and can often be complicated by medical staff who are expert in their own field, but may not be practical cooks, and sometimes cannot visualize what the diets they order mean in terms of food on the plate of an individual patient, or the difficulties which may be encountered by some outpatients—for example, elderly people living alone—who need to follow some modified diet.

Caterers, too, may not always be interested in or sympathetic to dietetic problems. To someone who is used to thinking in terms of gallons and cwts., and battling with a tight food budget, it does not always seem very important whether a dish for just a few patients is cooked with or without salt or with or without sugar.

It may be thought that one solution to the problem of in-patient dietetics in a small hospital would be for catering officers to be trained in dietetics. This has indeed been put into practice. A course has recently been organized specifically to train dietitian catering officers, but it is as yet too soon to evaluate the results. Courses are also available for students qualified in institutional management.

Integrating Special and Ordinary Diets

One advantage in the post of dietitian catering officer in a small hospital is that it can cut out unnecessary overlap between 'ordinary diets' and 'special diets'. It appears unnecessary and wasteful for two kitchens both to produce certain foods, when the ordinary menu could have been adapted. In new hospitals integration of special and ordinary diets could cut out overlap, but in many existing kitchens there is neither the space nor the equipment to cope with both ordinary diet and modified diets. There are advantages too in a separately organized diet kitchen as a means of teaching practical dietetics to interested students, but at the same time it is all too easy to fall into the error of producing not only special but unnecessarily elaborate diets.

A reprint of the articles on DIVINE HEALING published in the NURSING TIMES is available, price 1s. 8d. including postage, from the Manager, Nursing Times, Macmillan and Co. Ltd., St. Martin's Street, W.C.2.

Advising, Supervising and Teaching

At the present time the supply of dietitians lags far behind the demand, and it is unlikely that this position will change in the near future. In the interests of the patient it is necessary for available information to be spread as widely as possible. One way for this to be carried out would be for dietitians to concentrate on the wider aspects of their work within the hospital, teaching both normal nutrition and dietetics to student nurses and acting in an advisory and supervisory capacity. It is all too easy for a dietitian to become fully occupied with the day-to-day running of the mechanics of special diet production at the expense of her wider potential value in a hospital, including outpatient work, teaching, and helping research. In the majority of acute general hospitals most patients remain for so short a time that it is necessary to take a balanced view between the need for a simple or elaborate inpatient menu, and the need for ample time to teach dietetic principles.

Therapeutic dietetics is essentially an application of the basic principles of normal nutrition modified to meet the particular needs of the individual patient. Consequently a study of normal nutrition in health should precede any study of dietary modifications in disease.

It is a pity that the term 'special diet' ever came into use; 'modified diet' would give a much truer picture of what is meant. Diet therapy is perhaps unique in that it is not something extra for the patient, but something instead of what he would have anyway, namely food. Consequently some patients expect special foods in a special diet as a matter of course, and do not always appreciate that common or garden foods, appropriately chosen, can be a form of therapy. The idea that special diets should automatically include such items as chicken and sole dies hard.

At-a-glance Chart

The chart shown was recently brought into use at this hospital to facilitate dietetic service, and to show which foods are suitable for different types of diets. The chart is hung in all ward kitchens and is used in the PTS. Standardization of most of the types of diets helps to cut out unnecessary work, and the nurse can see at a glance that, for example, a patient on 1000-calorie diet should have one slice of bread for tea, or that a patient on a low-salt diet should have low-salt bread.

Staff immediately concerned with the dietetic welfare of patients are the doctor, nurse, caterer and, in those hospitals where she is to be found, the dietitian. The nurse is in a key position to correlate medical and catering aspects with the needs of the individual patient, provided that she is interested in, and has knowledge of, dietetics. This requires close liaison between dietitians and nursing staff, in those hospitals where dietetic advice is available.

BOOK REVIEWS

We are revising our lists of book reviewers. We should be glad to know of any nurses, specialists in their subjects and actively engaged in nursing, who would be prepared to undertake an occasional review of books on their particular subject.

Ward Sister's Viewpoint

VIVIEN M. JENKINSON, Ward Sister, St. George's Hospital, London

DIETS IN HOSPITAL are another bit of technical nursing which has changed enormously in the past 20 years. In 1940 nurses in hospital kitchens were making jelly and custard for the gastrics, weighing chilly potatoes for the diabetic, and putting out dollops of milk pudding for the low-residues.

Pre-packaged Service

Since then in the few hospitals fully equipped with a dietitian and a diet kitchen, we have swung to a pre-packaged service. Foods are prepared, served and labelled in the diet kitchen and sent down to the wards, for nurses and orderlies to carry to the patients.

Though this pre-packaged service may appear easier for the nurse, it has a lot of problems for her, too. For unlike a central syringe service, a central diet service must be acceptable to the individual patient's tastes, or the whole purpose of it is lost. And a nurse divorced from selecting, preparing and serving the food is quickly in trouble when the patient seeks her advice.

'Can I have some ice-cream? Is it all right for me to eat these sweets? Should I buy diabetic chocolate? Can I have fish instead of eggs? This patent, branded food—can I have it now? Of course, I can't afford this diet at home.'

These are the sort of problems which the patient poses to the nurse at his bedside.

Now it is easy for a nurse to know what she is doing. But if she is not actually doing it (even though she may have learnt it—and many of these questions are directed at a student nurse who has not yet 'done' her dietetics), the nurse will have great difficulty in helping the patient.

Easy Reference for Nurses

This is where the chart and the reference material of 'Do's and Don't's for Diets' come in. This material is available in the ward kitchens—right at the hub of ward meal service. It is of the greatest value to the nurse, faced as she is with the problem of serving several different diets at once. It shows her very clearly what each individual should have, and yet that all the special diets are merely a modification of the food served to the 'ordinary' patients. Thus, serving mid-morning coffee, it is easy to see who has skim milk, who has Edosol milk, and who must have a measured amount. Yet all have coffee. Thus comes the idea that patients don't get 'food or diet', but that food actually equals diet.

Without this material readily available the nurse, mistrusting her memory and knowledge, flies quickly to the telephone to seek the dietitian's advice—and the patient thinks 'Ah, she doesn't understand what my diet is; perhaps it has been wrong before.' But with this material, the nurse can work out the answers; together with the patient if desired, for this is an important part of his hospital stay if his dietary treatment is to be long-term therapy.

Royal Halifax Infirmary

Hospital on a hill, the Royal Halifax Infirmary. In the background, the Pennines.

THE ROYAL HALIFAX INFIRMARY (matron, Miss L. B. Gabbetis, S.R.N., S.C.M.) is a hospital on a hill, a steep hill which presented a challenge to its 19th century architects. They overcame the problem of keeping the wards on the level by building them on arches, like an aqueduct. Some of these arches have now been filled in to provide space for such departments as casualty and physiotherapy.

However, as can be seen in the picture on the right, the main corridor follows the slope of the hill. Pushing a trolley from the theatre to the wards can be uphill work indeed in these conditions.

The Infirmary was built in 1896, but the wards and departments are now being modernized, and our pictures show how the fireplaces and chimneys in the middle of the wards are being removed—this is being done from amenity funds, as the Ministry would not sanction Exchequer moneys being used for this purpose—the walls painted in pastel shades, and bed-curtains installed.

A Ward Call System

A NEW WARD COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM was shown to the press in London recently. It incorporates two-way speech between the patient and a nurse at a central console (a control board), a radio, a fire detection device, a bed light switch, staff location system and signal lamps, and a power point.

The bedside Telenurse equipment. The hand unit, with all the necessary controls, is hooked on to the locker. The patient is wearing special light-weight earphones; these are optional as a loudspeaker is incorporated in the unit, as well as a sensitive microphone.

The Telenurse equipment consists of a central console, a bed-head unit fixed to the wall, and a hand unit which plugs into the bed-head equipment and may be hooked to the locker. The hand unit may be used as a pillowphone, or with special light-weight earphones.

Two-way conversation can be initiated either by the patient or the nurse. A patient wishing to call a nurse operates a call switch which automatically lights a lamp, not only in the console, but also over all bedhead units. Should two patients call simultaneously the bedhead lights flash slowly. The same signal is set up by the patient operating the call switch twice in an emergency. The call switch automatically disconnects the loudspeaker from the radio and connects it to the intercom. The console light indicates to the nurse which patient is calling.

The Nuffield Nursing Homes Trust are planning to use the new equipment in their homes. It will be particularly useful in wards which are broken up into a number of rooms. Telenurse equipment is made by Sound Diffusion (Autothermatic) Ltd. of Portslade, Sussex.

Sheffield Corporation

Mental Hygiene Sheffield Maternity and Child Welfare Department has been paying increasing attention to the problems of mental hygiene in recent months. A new mental hygiene service has been established and comprises a mother and child clinic and a home visiting service by a team of selected health visitors. Clinics are held twice weekly. During October and November, 23 consultations took place and 12 additional interviews for further psychiatric advice were held. Most of the cases seen were in the very early stages when it was possible to adjust the parent-child relationship without special treatment.

Home visits are carried out by a team of health visitors trained in the psychology of human relationships by the senior medical officer for mental health assisted by the psychiatric social worker. The in-service training of these health visitors is already showing good results.

Loan of Sick-room Requisites One of the services provided by Burnley Borough Council is the provision of sick-room requisites for patients being nursed at home. Despite the fact that the charges for this service are purely nominal, difficulty has been experienced in collecting payments in some cases.

The Council has decided that unless some attempt is made by borrowers to make these payments, the items loaned are to be withdrawn. The necessary arrangements for this action have been left in the hands of the medical officer of health and the chairman of health committee.

SURGERY

Amputation of all Toes

MICHAEL FLINT, M.B., B.S., F.R.C.S., and RODNEY SWEETNAM, M.B., B.Chir., F.R.C.S., The Institute of Orthopaedics, Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital, London and Stanmore

Fixed clawing of the toes due to rheumatoid arthritis, severe hallux valgus or pes cavus renders the toes useless for walking. A series of cases is described here where all the toes were amputated; 93 per cent. of the series were found to be very satisfactory.

FIXED CLAWING OF THE TOES with dorsal dislocation of the metatarso-phalangeal joints is often seen in patients with rheumatoid arthritis, pes cavus, and severe hallux valgus. It may cause much pain and restriction of activity. Some patients can be made comfortable by regular chiropody and the provision of special shoes, but often conservative measures are only partly successful, and a more radical approach to the problem is necessary.

Moderate fixed deformity of the toes can, of course, be corrected by arthrodesis of the interphalangeal joints or by one of the many operations that shorten the skeletal framework of the toe; but in the severely crippled foot with multiple metatarso-phalangeal dislocations and fixed deformities of the toes these minor procedures are often ineffective or disappointing.

Hoffmann (1912) introduced an operation to correct multiple toe deformities by excision of all the metatarsal heads through a single transverse plantar incision. He considered that the operation removed the force tending to displace the toes dorsally and so relieved pain and corrected deformity. Fowler (1957, 1959) described an operation using a dorsal approach. He advised removal of the bases of the proximal phalanges, refashioning of the metatarsal heads and excision of the painful callus under the prominent metatarsal heads.

Many surgeons, however, believe that there is no value in preserving stiff deformed functionless toes, and advise amputation in severe cases (Nissen, 1953; Pridie, 1959; Sayle-Creer, 1959).

Hendry (1959) has performed this amputation several hundred times with excellent results, and credit should be given to him for being among the first to draw attention to its merits. At the Birmingham meeting of the British Orthopaedic Association in 1938 he showed a small series of patients, all of whom were delighted with the relief of pain after amputation of all their toes. Although amputation of all the toes of a foot must be a widespread practice, we have been unable to find any other reference to a series of cases so treated. Certainly the operation was well known to the first generation of orthopaedic surgeons in this country. We have learnt from several sources that Sir Robert Jones frequently did the operation, and a patient upon whom he had operated many years before was shown at the Exeter meeting of the Royal Society of Medicine in 1937 by Mr. Norman Capener. Catterall and Oakley (1957) found a similar operation of great value in the treatment of gangrenous or infected toes in the diabetic ischaemic foot.

Recently we have had the opportunity of reviewing 47 amputations in 28 patients. Most were operated upon more than five years ago and the good results seem worth recording.

Technique of Operation

In this series the technique used was that described by Nissen (1957). The incision begins over the first metatarsal head and runs transversely across the dorsum of the toes to the lateral border of the foot. After crossing the proximal phalanx of each toe, it dips down into the intervening web spaces, and in this way adequate skin flaps are assured. A similar incision is made on the plantar aspect and both are deepened to bone through which the extensor and flexor tendons and neurovascular bundles are divided, and each toe is disarticulated in turn. When all the toes have been disarticulated they are found to be joined together by a narrow bridge of skin from each web (Fig. 2). Any lateral or plantar prominence of the metatarsals is trimmed off and any evident rheumatoid cysts are removed. The wound is closed with interrupted sutures. The suture line comes to lie well dorsal to the pressure areas on the sole.

Fig. 2. Toes after disarticulation—joined by narrow bridges of skin from base of webs.

Post-operative Management

The pressure dressing is retained until the sutures are removed on the 10th day. When the wound is healed a special insole is provided (Fig. 4). This insole is covered with sponge rubber and incorporates a combined metatarsal and cavus support, together with a cork toe block faced with sponge rubber. Either ordinary or surgical shoes are worn, according to the width of the forefoot. A few patients have preferred normal shoes without insoles. We have found it important to provide shoes of full length; short surgical shoes made to fit the toeless feet are not only uncomfortable and unsightly, but lead to instability. The length and natural flexibility of the normal shoe seems to compensate for the stabilizing function of even grossly deformed toes, a factor easily forgotten when such toes are regarded as functionless. Catterall has used the Downie prosthesis and has found it very satisfactory.

Results

Of the 28 patients whom we have been able to trace, 19 had both feet operated upon and so 47 toeless feet were available for review. The average length of follow-up was five and a half years. The cause of deformity and age at operation are given in Table 1 (below).

Before operation the patients were all severely handicapped. One patient suffering from severe rheumatoid arthritis was bedridden but subsequently got about again. Most patients were unable to wear ordinary shoes before operation.

All 28 patients felt that they had been improved by operation. Those patients who had no significant discomfort in the feet, no stump tenderness and no tender callus under prominent metatarsal heads, and who felt that they had been greatly improved by the operation, were classed as having an excellent result. Patients who were well pleased with their feet but still had some tenderness of the stump or metatarsal heads were graded as having a good result. Those who had considerable discomfort under the metatarsal heads, but less than before amputation, or who complained of instability, were classed as having a fair result.

Of the 28 patients, 21 had excellent, five good, and two fair results. The two described as fair were troubled particularly by instability and metatarsal head pressure from wearing short unpadded shoes. They were made much more comfortable with new full-length shoes and insoles.

Discussion

Amputation of painful dislocated toes removes both the cause of local pain and disability, and the downward thrust on the metatarsal heads which aggravates the metatarsalgia. It might be thought that excision of all the toes would produce an unstable and unsightly foot and that dropping of the forefoot with a consequent increase in metatarsalgia would occur after the operation, but this has not been our experience.

The Hancock committee (1947), appointed to assess disability after injury, reported that 'amputation of all the toes leaves the main part of the foot intact and does not therefore have such a serious effect on the power and balance as trans-metatarsal amputation', but went on to state that 'it does, however, tend to destroy the arch of the foot by damaging the flexor muscles and thus renders necessary the use of a surgical boot, without which walking is difficult.' Because of this the committee proposed that the disability arising from loss of all toes should be assessed at 20 per cent. for one foot and 40 per cent. for both. We have found, however, that the arch of the foot is usually well preserved (Fig. 5).

Fig. 6 (below left). Normal shoes worn after amputation.

Many of the patients examined are able to wear normal shoes with metatarsal pads and toe blocks (Fig. 6), and sometimes even these have been discarded.

On the other hand, the preservation of a full-length shoe is a necessity. It seems that apparently functionless toes have some use in the maintenance of balance. The provision of normal-length shoes with toe blocks compensates for the loss of the toes and makes it possible for the patient to walk normally.

We have not found that amputation produces either dropping of the forefoot or any increased prominence of the metatarsal heads. Those patients without anterior flat foot before operation have not developed it and most of those with previous metatarsalgia improved after operation. It is of interest that the one amputation necessitated by injury produced 'no disability whatsoever' in the words of the patient and that examination revealed an otherwise normal foot without any callus under the metatarsal heads. We also know of an active mountaineer who, having lost all the toes from both feet by frostbite, continues mountain climbing (Fig. 7).

In our opinion amputation of all the toes is a valuable procedure and should be more widely employed in the treatment of fixed claw-toe deformity associated with multiple metatarso-phalangeal dislocations.

Summary

1. The indications for amputation of all the toes for severe toe deformity in rheumatoid arthritis, hallux valgus and pes cavus are discussed.

2. The results of 47 amputations in 28 patients are analysed: 93 per cent. were found to be very satisfied with the operation.

3. The technique of the operation and the subsequent management are described. The importance of retaining full-length shoes fitted with metatarsal insoles and toe blocks to preserve a good gait and balance is emphasized.

TODAY'S DRUGS

Conovid (G. D. Searle)

This is a progestogen-oestrogen mixture which has been undergoing trial as an oral contraceptive. It acts on the endometrium and on the secretion of the pituitary gonadotrophins; depression of the latter inhibits ovulation. On withdrawal of the drug bleeding occurs like that in a normal period.

One tablet of Conovid is taken daily, preferably at night, the course beginning on day five of the menstrual cycle (day one being the first day of bleeding) and continuing for 20 days. Normally a period follows one to four days later and the course is resumed on the fifth day of the cycle as before. This can be repeated indefinitely with the same effect so far as present knowledge goes. Sometimes, especially during the first few cycles of treatment, slight vaginal bleeding may occur; the patient should ignore this but, if a proper period begins before the end of the 20-day course, the tablets should be stopped and resumed five days later. Occasionally a period fails to appear after stopping the course; in this case the tablets should be resumed after five days have elapsed since the end of the previous course. A period can confidently be expected after the end of this second course.

Clinical trials have shown that the method is reliable and subsequent fertility does not appear to be impaired. Evidence for the long-term safety of this method will, of course, not be complete for another 20 years or more. What is known so far seems to raise no undue fears for the future. The likelihood of these oral contraceptives being carcinogenic is probably extremely remote and fears that they might cause congenital defects in babies born subsequently are probably groundless.

Nausea is the commonest side-effect; others include breast engorgement, premenstrual tension, headaches, and weight gain. They are most frequently encountered in the first few months and later disappear. When treatment is stopped, it is usual for the first ovulation to be delayed, so that the first post-treatment cycle is typically prolonged—for example, to 35 days. Thereafter the cycle length returns to normal.

TALKING POINT

HUMAN RELATIONS is the new Thing, as we have (nearly) all realized by now. What I, for one, didn't anticipate was that it would break into the headlines of the national press as Inhumanity in Our Hospitals and Charter for Mothers.

In my view it is one thing to wrangle within the family such as in the columns of a professional journal or at Branch meetings; it is quite another to wash the dirty linen in the public press. If I were about to be delivered of a child I should, to put it mildly, be extremely apprehensive as to the kind of treatment I should get, even though the Minister has now told the midwives not to be beastly to the Mums.

But back to human relations. In 21 years in hospital on only two isolated occasions have I ever seen a nurse treat a patient unkindly. Perhaps I've been lucky, but there it is. But the occasions on which I've seen untold kindness, gentleness, generosity and compassion are quite without number. The patience of the young, who are alleged to be intolerant, never ceases to amaze me.

Ward sisters are women whose main consideration always seems to be the maintenance of the standard of the nursing care of the patients; few of them work the much-vaunted 44-hour week. The tutors are fighting a tremendous battle against overwhelming odds in the shape of frequent intakes, perpetual blocks, a shortening of the training period and student nurses who expect all their teaching to be given in their duty time.

The matrons, who carry the responsibility for the nursing throughout the hospital, 24 hours out of 24, have more worries than most of the rest of the working women's population. It is interesting that the position of the matron, outlined so clearly by Miss Nightingale, who had seen all the pitfalls of clerical and secular administration in hospitals throughout Europe a hundred years ago, seems again to be in jeopardy. Sometimes, when appointments for matrons go unfilled for months, one wonders just what selection committees are looking for; one is tempted to think that the shortage is less of suitable responsible women than of suitable biddable pawns.

So this week I'm all on your side, every one of you. I'm heartily sick of reading press cuttings of inhumanity in hospital, Mothers' Charters and such-like. Quite soon there will be no one to treat the patients either humanely or otherwise.

I understand that the Minister is asking that action be taken on Human Relations in Obstetrics by July 31. Already secretaries' offices are asking how far the recommendations are being implemented. This seems to me dangerously like asking that unanswerable question 'Have you stopped beating your wife?'

WRANGLER.

IT HAS BEEN SAID

Shortage of Hospital Staff

'. . . IN OUR EXPERIENCE mental hospitals have extreme difficulty in attracting candidates, even though they are prepared to accept those below the recommended educational standards, and overseas candidates with a minimal knowledge of English. The wastage-rate is disproportionately high, the more promising candidates often leaving first. This has led to a vicious spiral, which will not easily be broken.

We consider that it is not sufficiently well recognized that in the average mental hospital the following practices are common:

(1) A ward of 50 patients with only one nurse, who may not be fully trained.

(2) A 'disturbed' or admission ward of up to 30 patients (including suicidal patients) staffed by one trained nurse and two student nurses. This degree of understaffing can lead to potentially dangerous situations, and incidents which can be frightening for new members of the staff.

(3) Two nurses on night duty in a geriatric ward of 50 patients, where many patients are incontinent, some doubly so, and many are liable to become restless or confused.

(4) No proper arrangements, due to shortages, to relieve nurses during mealtimes, or absences when escorting patients elsewhere; in these circumstances one nurse 'covers' two or three wards. This applies also when staff are away on leave or sick.

(5) Under these conditions nurses are unable to get to know more than a few patients individually, and the time-consuming but rewarding work of rehabilitation of chronic patients must be sacrificed to maintaining minimum standards of care. The ideal of treating patients in small groups is rarely achieved.

The situation is less desperate in non-teaching general hospitals, but the basic problems are similar. As soon as there are too few nurses to do the work adequately, new recruits are rapidly lost. They are overwhelmed, partly by the physical effort of trying to do the work of two, and partly, because youth is idealistic, by the impossibility of doing a satisfactory job. The nurses with whom we have discussed these problems feel that the points we have made are more important than the inconvenient hours and comparatively poor pay.

We have worked in several large mental hospitals in the London area; these problems are common to all. As we do not wish to identify specific hospitals, may we sign ourselves

Public Health Nursing in Cornwall

IT IS HARD TO IMAGINE a lovelier part of the country to work in than Cornwall. And if a hospital nurse might venture an opinion, there can be few more satisfying jobs than the care of families found in the work of those nurses who are combining district nursing, midwifery and health visiting duties in the rural parts of England.

I saw a midwife, in the heart of the country—you can see her picture on the next page—visiting her patient on the 10th day after delivery, and she was able to tell her patient that although, after 10 days, the health visitor took over, she would still be calling, because she was the health visitor too. And I saw the look of confidence and appreciation on that patient's face. It was a relationship any nurse would envy.

In other parts of the country, under other conditions, this way of working is not found possible. Some do not even think it desirable. But there is no doubt it is satisfying.

Still 'Talking It Out'—2

Exploring Group Discussion

As the weeks went by we were aware of the support of the group more and more strongly. Yet this support was sometimes felt as a challenge or a threat. It was as if, having asked for its advice or reassurance, we were swept into action by the group's concentrated attention, and then abruptly left to carry on alone. This made us feel angry at times, and in return we would demand that the group listen to the results of its advice, whether it wished to do so or not.

Nevertheless some individual problems would be sufficiently urgent to force the group's attention, as when Allan, one of the tutors, was meeting with active hostility from a senior, and was at his wits' end to know how to deal with the situation and safeguard the students in his care. When an outside problem forced itself upon us we saw how the group could swing easily from one aspect of its work to the other. But usually group dynamics were fused with therapeutic activity in a constant interplay, and the topic pursued would both illustrate a group problem and help the individual who introduced it.

One example of this arose out of Pat's note-taking. At the beginning of the year we had a number of discussions on whether or not we should keep a written record. Eventually, Pat began taking notes regularly—writing a great deal at each meeting, and consequently saying little. Pat holds an administrative position, and most of us felt she was intellectually our superior, and her senior position in the profession gave her added status. After she had been taking notes for some time she went on a fortnight's holiday, and the group took this opportunity of discussing what had become a group problem—our feelings about Pat and her notes.

'Conflict between Intellect and Emotion'

We felt that she was not taking part in the group; that the note-taking was just an excuse to withdraw and observe us; our feelings were being examined and recorded, while her own were carefully hidden. We were frightened of her. Jean interpreted our discussion as expressing the universal conflict between intellect and emotion that goes on in all of us. On the one hand we were afraid of being ruled by emotion, and tried to control feeling by intellectual detachment; on the other hand we were aware of the need for emotional release and development. We were feeling angry with Pat because we could not solve the conflict in ourselves, and she symbolized this conflict.

'These experiences led us to see that the most important function of the group was to work to produce this atmosphere, in which insight could develop and interpretation be accepted.' This article concludes an account of the development of a group.

'Well! What's been happening while I've been away?' said Pat the following week. Tentatively we started to describe our discussion. Because it meant a lot to us, and because it was not easy to say, we said it badly. Pat rejected the idea that she was working on an intellectual level only, and depriving us of her contribution.

Like-Dislike Situations

It was at this point that Renee, who at that time was qualified in psychiatric nursing and was halfway through her general training, brought up her problem. Like Pat she had not been present at the last two meetings, but now she broke into the discussion to tell us that she was having great difficulty with her ward sister, and had been away from the group for the last two weeks because sister would not give her the right evening off duty. 'She could give it to me—but she won't! She says she's sick of being "psychoanalysed"—it scares her. She's tired of hearing about mental nursing, and yet she keeps asking questions. She's always watching me, and keeps me on duty when it isn't necessary, just out of spite. I think she needs a whipping boy, and we all come in for it in turn. The trouble is I still like her although she's so awkward. The other day she found I hadn't had any lunch, and she stayed on herself, just to help me. I don't know what to do. I wish I didn't feel—it must be wonderful to be detached! I feel drained—exhausted.'

There was much more of this nature, and the problem was quite obviously very real to Renee. We all felt a quick sympathy with her and wanted to help. At the same time we sensed some parallel between Renee's like-dislike feeling towards the sister and our own ambivalence towards Pat.

'It irritates her that I should like her.'

'That's because she knows you understand her better than the others do. She also likes and dislikes at the same time', replied Marian. Marian tried to get Renee to see it from sister's point of view. 'You provoke her. It's difficult to be a student again when you are already experienced. She feels you know far more than she does in some fields.'

'She twists my words round, and says she can't stand silly conversation,' cried Renee, while some of us glanced at Pat.

Gradually Renee began to relax and to concede that there might be two sides to the story. She was impulsive, and often spoke without stopping to think that what she said, although true, might be hurtful and destructive. It was obvious that the sister felt threatened by Renee, and was pushing her away in self-defence. If Renee could see this, and put herself in the sister's place, the situation might improve.

Individual and Group Problems—the Parallel

That the rest of us were recognizing the parallel between Renee's problem and the group problem was illustrated by Steven, who had been quietly listening, and now joined in to tell the story of the time he spent as a student nurse in the theatre. 'I hated her so much that I went to matron and said I felt like strangling sister. Matron said everyone wanted to move from theatre, and the only way out was to go through with it, step by step, until the training was finished!' In spite of ourselves the meeting broke up in a wave of laughter.

Nevertheless, in the next few meetings we were able to admit how useful Pat's notes were. She told us she felt we had made a personal attack on her, and we agreed that this was true. She explained again why she wanted notes taken.

'You're behaving differently already,' said Marian. 'Showing more feeling.' 'You never told us before what you felt about anything,' said Allan. 'In fact,' Tony chimed in, 'you said we bored you!'

We all agreed we had been feeling angry, and felt much better for having said so, and that we had projected a group problem on to Pat, but that all the same we wanted her to be more 'in the group'. Jean explained that the warm feeling generated by discussing the problem had united the group sufficiently for us to feel able to accept different activities from members, without feeling it as a threat or a withdrawal. Several of us said

'. . . the warm feeling generated by discussing the problem had united the group sufficiently for us to feel able to accept different activities from members without feeling it as a threat or a withdrawal.'

that it no longer worried us that Pat was taking notes, and there was laughter as Tony added, 'If she stopped now we'd all get worried!'

Pat was glad we had brought the problem out, instead of ignoring it. She said she knew she tended to dominate any group of which she was a member, and she had tried hard not to do this with our group. We all felt her relationship with the rest of us was closer as a result of the discussion.

'Atmosphere in which Insight could Develop'

This dovetailing of therapeutic activity and group dynamics occurred constantly. A warm, secure feeling in the group always led to lighthearted comments and snatches of conversation in pairs, much of which we saw to be clearly relevant to the subject, and often more revealing than the generalized discussion. In this kind of atmosphere it was easier to talk about anger or anxiety, and easier to accept the interpretations Jean put before us. These experiences led us to see that the most important function of the group was to work to produce this atmosphere, in which insight could develop and interpretation be accepted.

We began to feel that the group life expressed itself very much as the life of a family does.

Often our behaviour towards Jean and Marian was that of children towards parents—asking for support and approval, resenting discipline, questioning authority, sometimes wanting our freedom, but afraid to go out on our own. We tried to play off 'father' against 'mother'. How far could we go? What were the rules? Would they take us back again?

'Often our behaviour was that of children towards parents—asking for support and approval, resenting discipline, questioning authority, sometimes wanting our freedom, but afraid to go out on our own.'

On one occasion the 'family' had an important visitor, a friend of Pat's, who had come to this country to see something of our nursing. We decided just what contribution each one of us would make in order to give our visitor the best picture of nursing in Britain. Metaphorically the family got out the best china and prepared a special meal—saying all the time, of course, that if she wanted to come she'd just have to take us as she found us.

As it turned out, although we thought we had made preparations there was apparently a little confusion about the date, and Pat arrived with Elsa a week before she was expected—not unknown, even in the best families. Nevertheless, we all went into action as planned. Elsa was a delightful person, who asked all the right questions, and showed a friendly interest in the family, while led by Pat each of us in turn told about our work, and described the world of nursing as we saw it.

All went well, except that Renee, impulsive as ever, started describing rather heatedly some of the difficulties a psychiatric nurse meets when she tries to do her general training. However, she didn't get far before someone neatly took over and brought the conversation back to safer topics. We parted feeling relieved that the visit had gone off so well.

Next week we were told by Renee exactly what had happened.

Not one of us had behaved naturally. We were all acting a part—hadn't we held a dress rehearsal the week before? We were hypocritical and untruthful, we all oozed charm—and we had all been allowed to speak except her. We countered that Elsa had come for information, not to listen to a group session. That she was trying in a very short time to get a picture of nursing in this country, and that we had planned the evening accordingly.

For two weeks we hammered away at it. Finally we agreed that we had, of course, put on a show for Elsa, even if it was a good show. Like all families we had expanded on the good points, and closed our ranks quickly when one of the skeletons threatened to leave the cupboard.

Talking it over we realized what a great help Renee was on occasions like this. First, by recalling to us how we ourselves felt when we were younger in the nursing profession, and secondly, by saying what she felt without fear and so bringing problems into the open when the rest of us tended to dissemble.

Leadership of Group

An interesting feature of this year's work had been the part played by Jean and Marian. In inviting them to join us we had intended Jean to be our leader, in place of Dr. Richards, and Marian to be another resourceful member because of her experience with other groups. Although this was clear to us at the time, it was not clear to Jean and Marian until much later. Consequently they looked on themselves as sharing the leadership of the group. This naturally threw a certain amount of strain on them, especially as their methods of working were not identical, but it proved to be of great value to the group.

Jean's method was to watch a situation building up, and then to tell us what she thought had happened, and why we had felt and acted as we had, and to indicate the line we could most usefully follow to develop further understanding.

If we were unable to accept the interpretation she put forward it would be ignored, or brushed aside as unimportant, and the discussion would go on as before. If we were vaguely aware ourselves of what was going on, the general feeling would be, 'Well, it's true. But you didn't have to say so!' and we should probably stop talking on that particular subject. If, however, the atmosphere was safe enough and easy enough for us to accept what Jean was saying, then it would be taken up at once, and developed in the discussion which followed.

Marian's method on the other hand was one calculated to produce just this atmosphere in which Jean's interpretations could find acceptance. Faced with direct questions she would always turn the play of talk back into the group. 'What do you feel about it?' 'Well—what do you think?', she would say.

In fact her method was a way of drawing out the potential in the group; of developing skills that she could see were present, but which we doubted, by gently re-investing us with the powers we tried to hand over to her.

Together the two methods seemed complementary, and we turned easily first to Jean and then to Marian, as we felt the need, always regarding Jean as the leader, and feeling no strain over their partnership while they themselves were in harmony. Only on the few occasions when they found difficulty in their roles did the group also feel worried and disturbed—illustrating what we had already learnt in our first year.

This partnership threw a helpful light on the parts played by the doctor and sister in charge of a ward, in relation to the ward staff and the patients. It showed how the doctor's role of interpretation and policy-making, expressed by Jean, needs the support of the sister's enabling and strengthening activity if it is to bear fruit, each being more effective when reinforced by the other.

It also showed us how, in moments of difficulty and tension, the group could be helped by a splitting of the emotional load between two people. Jean and Marian could support each other in presenting the problem and the solution from two points of view. By the time we had knocked one down the other was up again, and between them they could carry on until we had worked through it, whereas one alone might have found the task more difficult. Again we saw the parallel with the parts played by doctor and ward sister. How vital it is that they should be able to trust each other far enough to discuss their differences without evasion, and understand one another's skills sufficiently to see that each is handicapped without the other.

FILM REVIEW

Fundamental Principles of Immunization

Immunization, against many diseases, plays an important part in preventive medicine. In this film* the production of vaccines and antisera for this purpose is shown. Animated diagrams portray the types of immunity that occur or may be conferred.

I think student nurses would find this film rather complex to understand since they are not expected to be familiar with either production techniques or terms used to describe them. It does, however, show the immense care taken in making prophylactics and their wide range of use both in medical and veterinary science.

16 mm. film made for Burroughs Wellcome and Co., available after mid-May from Wellcome Film Library, The Wellcome Building, Euston Road, London, N.W.1. Running time 37 min., colour with sound commentary. Leaflet on film supplied on request. Film available on free loan but up to one month's notice is advisable.*

Letters to the Editor

OPENING THE DOORS

MADAM.—I have just read Claire Rayner's article (Nursing Times, March 31). For once I am in complete agreement with one of your more provocative articles.

After eight years' hospital nursing including sister's experience, I became a district nurse (Ranyard) in the Deptford and Greenwich area of London. Here the value of visiting friends and relations was truly apparent. We often fail to realize that our patients are ordinary human beings like ourselves. Imagine how dull our lives would seem if all our outside contacts and family gossip was confined to a period of four hours weekly. Why should we inflict this state of isolation and loneliness on our patients at a time when most of them benefit from outside stimulus?

My present calling of wife and mother of two young children has shown me yet another side of the problem. How many hospital sisters or nurses appreciate the difficulties of finding suitable baby-sitters for the allotted visiting times?

My friend's five-year-old daughter recently saw her father being taken to hospital for an operation by ambulance and remarked that 'Dead men go in there, mummy'. Her three-year-old brother was convinced that he would never see Daddy again and was off his food, sleeping badly, and miserable throughout his father's two weeks' absence. This sort of home situation obviously affects the patient via his wife and could be greatly eased by relaxation of the present visiting system.

Thank you, Claire Rayner, for bringing to light yet another way in which our hospital service can be improved.

MARY J. ROBERTS, D.N. (LOND.), S.R.N., I.N.C., C.M.B. PART 1.

MADAM.—Claire Rayner writes urging unrestricted visiting and you ask for comments.

Surely it was very recently that there was a newspaper report of some hospital that tried it, but after some months abandoned it, at the request of the patients! They simply couldn't stand the numbers of people who came so constantly, and stayed so long. When a patient needed rescuing from difficult visitors the nurses had not got the lever 'time's up..' Though I must say the proposed two half hours in the new suggested time-table seem badly balanced to me.

I would suggest considerable freedom from, say, 4.30 p.m.—7.30 p.m., under the control of ward sister, and not by regulation from some distant committee. Parents who are patients should not be deprived of their children's company. This especially applies to maternity hospitals, and in geriatric wards all new grandchildren should be brought for inspection; and visits by all growing grandchildren.

M. Morgan asks: 'Is it a good thing to let a wife sit by the bed of her husband when he is very critically ill?' My answer would be 'Yes, of course', but one wonders why M. Morgan questions this. Could we be told? Actually the more ill the patient the more freely visitors are allowed, an ironic situation, as C.R. points out.

J. L. M. CARTER.

MADAM.—In our hospital we have 10 children's beds and have had unrestricted visiting for the children just over a year.

This was requested by the staff on the ward as it was felt that both child and staff would be happier if mother could share in the care of the sick child. It was also felt that it would lessen the number of visitors in the ward at any one time. We have found from our experiences advantages outweigh disadvantages.

When the child is admitted mother is told that she may visit any time and that she may be there when treatments are given. Some mothers are at first a little apprehensive but soon settle into our routine and assist with feeding and washing their child. This greatly assists our nursing staff. They also learn special treatments necessary for after-care.

We do occasionally have difficulty in getting mothers to visit, as they still cling to the old school of thought, no visiting for children. Mothers with other children or where transport difficulties arise are grateful for the attention given to their child by other visitors. They read to them and play games with them, again helping the nursing staff when time often does not permit these extras.

Those parents who have had children in our hospital agree as we do that, with mother a frequent visitor, hospital life is not so bad after all. This has proved very successful and there is no doubt that it has created a greater harmony among parents and nursing staff.

Sister Tutor,
Cirencester Memorial Hospital.

A SUGGESTED TALKING POINT

MADAM.—In reply to Sisyphus (April 7): after 15 years' nursing I am rolling the same stone up another hill in what would, I am sure, be regarded as a less skilled occupation.

I am delighted at the greater freedom of choice I have in making decisions in new situations, but my slowness to grasp opportunities of using initiative has made me notice how stereotyped a nurse's responses become. This seems surprising in view of the clinical responsibility we have all taken.

It can be explained—as in the Services—by the rigid staff structure in which we work, and this is valuable in that it safeguards the interests of the patient. It is unfortunate, however, that by the time initiative is really needed it has usually atrophied!

THEN AND NOW

MADAM.—Twenty years ago—if I may generalize for the sake of brevity—there were fewer nurses on the wards and they did nearly all the cleaning, served the meals and arranged the flowers; they also gave out early morning teas and the late evening drinks.

Now, the least infirm patient is roused at (say) 6.30 a.m. and the least unwilling is still washing up when the rest have got their curlers in. Is there a good reason for this?

The Training of Pupil Nurses

IRENE M. DAWSON, S.R.N., S.T.D.,
Tutor, Nightingale Training School, St. Thomas's Hospital, S.E.1.

This is the second part of the abstract of Miss Dawson's report, written as a result of a bursary awarded by Miss M. A. Gullan to trainees of the Nightingale School. We are indebted to the Marion Agnes Gullan Bursary Committee of St. Thomas's Hospital for permission to publish parts of this report.

4. NURSES' ACCOMMODATION

Many pupil nurses are non-resident. In dual training schools where accommodation was provided, the student and pupil nurses lived in the same nurses home and shared all social and recreational facilities.

Where residential accommodation was provided for pupil nurses, it compared very favourably with the homes for student nurses. Where student nurses and pupil nurses lived together in the same home, rooms were filled as they became vacant, so that pupils were not segregated on one floor or along a corridor.

Changing rooms were on the whole inadequate, even when nearly all the nurses were non-resident; lockers were too small; there were rarely any facilities for drying clothes on a wet day and there were not enough lavatories, hand basins or mirrors. Split duties are common in many hospitals and sitting-rooms were sometimes a long way from changing rooms.

I did not hear of any hospital authorities building blocks of flats for their trained staff, where they could live near their work with children or elderly relatives. The number of residences around hospitals in many cities is rapidly diminishing, so that residential areas are spreading far out of the town centre. Travelling, especially in London, is very expensive, time-consuming and tiring.

So many of the trained nurses, SRN and SEN, have domestic responsibilities. A compact labour-saving flat, at reasonable rent, near work and with a good landlord, would be an attraction to all trained nurses. Pupil nurses might be prepared to put up with difficulties for the two years' training; but unless they could be sure of suitable accommodation near the hospital after training, it is doubtful whether they would be able to remain to work in the wards as permanent staff.

In dual training schools any facilities for games, drama, choir, etc., were available for all nurses, and these were considered valuable co-operative activities.

5. POSTS AVAILABLE AFTER TRAINING

The State-enrolled nurses who remained in the wards were very happy. They found the work satisfying and were appreciated by the ward sisters. There were not nearly enough of them. In industrial towns this may have been due to the lack of accommodation sufficiently near the hospital to make full-time nursing compatible with domestic responsibilities. Many SENs take a further training.

There were many State-enrolled nurses in hospitals. They found the work interesting and satisfying and they were valued by the ward sisters. On the whole these were among the older nurses. They were particularly happy in geriatric wards, where they could take considerable responsibility. They tended to become discouraged if they were moved to a busy acute ward and left to do non-nursing duties away from the ward (which should be done by ward maids or orderlies).

They do not seek drama in nursing but they do want to be with the patients and appreciated as nurses rather than pairs of hands; they also like to be called 'nurse' rather than Mrs. Blank, who might be a domestic worker.

If a State-enrolled nurse takes the general training for State registration she is allowed a reduction of six months' training and receives a higher training allowance. This inducement influences many SENs to attempt the training against advice. The same applies to midwifery.

Some enrolled nurses take posts in old people's homes. They are admirably trained for this, and can often have a self-contained flat. Some girls on leaving school had 'filled the gap' by working in old people's homes and others in schools as under-matrons; many return to these posts after training. There are many advertisements for SENs in occupational health but I did not meet any pupil nurses intending to do this. Many SENs are employed on the district, some with Queen's Nurses who find their help invaluable, especially with the chronic sick; an increasing number of local authorities employ them.

6. WASTAGE

At present about one third of the pupil nurses leave during training. The figures I was given varied between 15% and 50% and wastage seemed directly associated with the initial care taken in selection. Wastage was higher among the younger age group.

Wastage was, on the whole, greater among the younger nurses, and fairly high among those who were referred from a general training school because they had failed. The importance of the initial selection was stressed many times. In cases of doubt it was found much more satisfactory to accept candidates as pupils and refer them for general training only if they were found suitable later.

There is still a general tendency for many people to consider the pupil nurse's training as something inferior. Very few can look upon the two types of nursing training as two different methods of approach to the care of the patients, with much in common, just as there are similarities between the work of the physiotherapist and the occupational therapist.

7. WARD STAFF REQUIRED FOR TRAINING

In wards where pupil nurses are trained a higher proportion of State-registered nurses is required than in wards where student nurses are trained, to carry out the technical nursing and to give adequate supervision; a permanent ward staff of State-enrolled nurses is also needed.

In training schools with an adequate number of trained nurses and domestic workers, where careful selection was observed, there was far less tendency to use pupils as pairs of hands. Where, however, recruitment was very poor there were two alternatives: either to accept any applicants for training as nurses (the wastage was then very high); or to observe careful selection with the few, to accept only those likely to finish the course for training as nurses, and to employ more orderlies or ward maids; by this means the standard was maintained and recruitment and type of applicant improved.

8. PERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS

(a) Ward Sisters

Many ward sisters appreciated the pupil nurses and took considerable care in teaching them; others seemed prejudiced, finding them slow and difficult to teach. A great deal seemed to depend on the manner in which the sisters were approached when they changed from having student nurses to pupil nurses.

The attitude of ward sisters to pupil nurses was not necessarily related to age or experience. I met several very young sisters who were extremely enthusiastic about the value of the State-enrolled nurses, and who exercised care in the training of the pupils. Some of the senior sisters had great confidence in the practical nursing care these nurses could give to their patients, although many admitted they did not like the idea at first.

All sisters agreed that great patience was needed all the time; every detail must be supervised until the pupils were thoroughly competent.

(b) Staff Nurses

A careful explanation at the time of appointment can do much to improve relationships between State-registered nurses and pupil nurses so that the SRN's responsibility towards the training is understood.

On the whole, few SRNs seemed to understand the pupil nurses or the enrolled nurses or to have much idea of the training which was required. It may have been due to the fact that the staff nurses were usually much younger than the pupils; but I did not meet any resentment from pupils at being instructed by younger State-registered nurses. It was probably due to lack of knowledge and it appeared that much propaganda is required, inside hospitals as well as outside, especially among the present student nurses. If a general training school proposed to train pupil nurses, it would be essential to enlist the co-operation of the State-registered nurses and student nurses before the first pupils entered.

(c) Medical Staff

Pupil nurses were appreciated by the medical staff for their accurate observations and care in carrying out instructions, provided there was adequate supervision. Many admitted that they had resented them at first.

The medical staff whom I met in the wards were very much interested in the pupil nurse training and anxious to help (I think pupils here were 'carefully selected'). They admitted, however, that they had resented them at first. After several years' experience they appreciated them as nurses, finding them thoughtful, observant and prepared to carry out instructions carefully and accurately. All agreed that they had a valuable part to play in the care of their patients, provided they had adequate supervision from SRNs.

(d) Student Nurses

Student nurses need to know more about the pupil nurses' training. In dual training schools student and pupil nurses seemed happy together and in experimental schemes where they worked together in the wards there was good co-operation.

Ward sisters in dual training schools took classes with the first-year student nurses and pupil nurses together. It seemed important that there should be an adequate number of domestic staff with clearly defined duties so that the pupil nurse was not sent outside the ward cleaning while the student nurse received all the teaching.

The number of untrained people working in the wards in some hospitals was alarming; they were all called 'nurse' by the patients. This must be confusing for the student and pupil nurses.

Pupil nurses at Orpington Hospital, Kent, help a patient under the guidance of a clinical instructor.

(e) Domestic Staff

Where the duties of pupil nurses and domestic staff were clearly defined, relationships seemed satisfactory.

Personal relationships were not easy to assess. On the whole there seemed many more domestic workers in provincial hospitals than in London. The duties of the pupil nurses and ward orderlies were clearly defined in most instances, so that overlapping was unlikely and an orderly replaced an orderly for off duty. It was suggested at one hospital that difficulties arose when the State-enrolled nurses and domestic workers came from the same district and lived near to each other. The domestic workers did not like being told what to do by the enrolled nurse if sister was busy. This difficulty could be overcome if a domestic supervisor was responsible. The difference in training allowance and weekly wage was another difficulty.

STUDENT NURSES' ASSOCIATION
CENTRAL REPRESENTATIVE COUNCIL

Candidates' Policies

London Area—General Hospitals

ONE VACANCY, THREE CANDIDATES

Miss H. J. Drury

HONORA J. DRURY, The Royal Hospital of St. Bartholomew, E.C.1.

POLICY. If elected on to the Central Representative Council, I shall endeavour to see that the ideas and opinions of the individual student nurse may be voiced at national level through her representative. To do this, we must all work for an increase in membership, and so try to double active and effective discussion in the unit, the area and on the council. Let me arouse that dormant enthusiasm, which, when functioning, will be the essence of the SNA, and a firm stepping stone for the future of our great profession. We must aim at a nation-wide membership, for the SNA of today is the Royal College of tomorrow.

Miss M. A. Wardlaw

MARGARET A. WARDLAW, Lambeth Hospital, S.E.11.

POLICY. If elected to serve on the Central Representative Council my policy would be: (1) To encourage meetings between ward sisters and student nurses to discuss matters of mutual concern relating to bedside nursing care and the practical instruction given to nurses on the wards. (2) To ensure that all nurses work a 44-hour week. (3) To dispense with unnecessary routine and customs that are not in the interests of the patients' comfort. (4) To increase occasions for student nurses to meet together to discuss matters of interest to the profession with a view to maintaining the highest standards of nursing.

Miss A. M. V. Wilson

AUDREY M. V. WILSON, The Nightingale Training School, St. Thomas's Hospital, S.E.1.

POLICY. If elected to the Central Representative Council I would work for the following objectives. (1) Increased membership of the SNA. (2) Inclusion in the curriculum of general nursing training of courses in obstetrics, psychiatric and children's nursing. Experience in all branches enables a nurse wishing to specialize to choose her speciality with discrimination. A comprehensive training is essential for travel exchange. (3) Adoption of the block study system by all hospitals. (4) Experimental introduction of a three shift per day system, each nurse to work the same shift for two weeks, thus she could know her off duty well in advance. (5) Improvement of living conditions and recreation facilities in the less well-equipped hospitals.

Northern Area—General Hospitals

ONE VACANCY, THREE CANDIDATES

Miss B. E. Clarkson

BRENDA E. CLARKSON, General Infirmary at Leeds.

POLICY. I feel that the Student Nurses' Association should be a strong, national unit whose opinion will be valued in any discussion or query regarding the profession as a whole including the conditions of student nurses, their education and practical work. The only time we can expect the nation to value an opinion is when they can feel that we do in fact represent all student nurses. Therefore, I feel that our main problems are recruitment and maintaining interest in the Association. If student nurses felt their opinions would be valued, that in itself would improve recruitment but more national and local publicity must still be developed.

Miss V. A. Elliott

VALERIE A. ELLIOTT, Shotley Bridge General Hospital.

POLICY. My policy would be to endeavour in every possible way to raise the professional status of the student nurse, by higher standards of education, resulting in higher standards of nursing. To support improvements in the training syllabus and nursing techniques. To maintain the interest of student nurses in the Student Nurses' Association, encouraging a wider field of interest especially between the various branches of nursing.

Miss P. M. Quinn

PATRICIA M. QUINN, War Memorial Hospital, Wrexham.

POLICY. (1) The enrolled nurse would give valuable assistance with basic nursing care and this would give the student nurses more time to gain an objective view of their patients' needs—mental and physical. (2) Every student nurse should keep in mind the lectures which they receive concerning Ethics of Nursing especially off duty so that the high standard of the nursing profession will be maintained. (3) Clinical instructors should be attached to the teaching department who will be responsible for the treatments to be carried out correctly and this would also relieve ward sisters of teaching responsibility. (4) Nurses should be encouraged to accompany consultants on their ward rounds to gain a better view concerning the treatment of their patients.

Western Area—General Hospitals

ONE VACANCY, TWO CANDIDATES

Miss M. E. Burrough

MARY E. BURROUGH, Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital, Exeter.

POLICY. If elected I should encourage: (1) Student nurses to join the Student Nurses' Association, because if there is a strong Unit within a hospital it may be used as a means by which they could voice their criticisms and constructive ideas, and because any opportunity for groups of people to exchange views stimulates their minds and instils a sense of team spirit, so essential in the nursing profession. (2) More clinical instruction carried out on the wards. (3) Greater use of ward orderlies so that nurses can give more attention to bedside nursing, and also to make it possible for student nurses to be spared for secondment for specialized experience.

Miss B. J. Sumner

BRENDA J. SUMNER, Southmead General Hospital, Bristol.

POLICY. If I am elected to the Central Representative Council my policy would be to decide what student nurses consider a good basic training and how much special experience should be gained in the fields of psychiatry and obstetrics, and whether theatre experience should be made compulsory. To encourage more teaching on the wards by the ward sister or clinical instructor. I would like to see a straight shift in all general hospitals as this would certainly benefit the patients and the reorganization of the patients' day would be an advantage both to them and to the staff.

OBITUARY

Miss M. Barrett, M.B.E.

We regret to announce the death, in her 83rd year, of Miss Madge Barrett, M.B.E., F.C.I.S., A.L.A.A., who guided the financial affairs of the Royal College of Nursing from the time of its founding in 1916 and for many years afterwards. Until 1933, her work for the College was on a part-time basis and she continued in private practice as an accountant. But in 1933 Miss Barrett became a full-time officer of the College as financial secretary, until her resignation in 1947.

Here and There

Wembley Hospital Party

A tea party which many past and present members of the nursing staff attended was recently held at Wembley Hospital in honour of the matron, Miss M. R. Dunning, who retired on March 31. She was presented with a 'Rock 'n Rest' chair, a transistor radio set, a gift token and some flowers. She also received a blue leather-bound album containing the signatures of all who had contributed to these gifts.

NHSR and Long Service Medal

Members of the National Hospital Service Reserve are to be eligible for the new Civil Defence Long Service Medal. The qualifying period of 15 years' efficient service in the Reserve or any of the other Civil Defence organizations, can include the former Civil Nursing Reserve. Former members of the Reserve who ceased to serve on or after January 19, 1958, will also be eligible. NHSR members who are whole-time hospital employees can also qualify.

The Minister of Health has asked hospital authorities to make known these details to Reserve members (and past members if possible), but it is the responsibility of individuals to complete the necessary application form (procedure is set out in explanatory leaflet CM.1) which has been circulated to hospital authorities.

FSSN and Graduated Pension Scheme

The FSSN have now issued a circular to employers giving particulars of the modified scheme which can optionally apply to FSSN members not contracted out of the Government Graduated Pension Scheme. It is impossible to state in general terms the amount of reduction in payments required or in reduction of benefits, as many factors, such as age and sex, influence these. But it is up to employers to apply the permitted modification, notifying the Scheme accordingly, should they consider it advantageous to those concerned.

Catering in Small Hospitals

Matrons and others having responsibility for catering in small hospitals in the South East Metropolitan Region had an opportunity recently to discuss various aspects of their work. This was by means of a symposium organized by the board, in conjunction with the School of Hospital Catering of King Edward's Hospital Fund. Catering in small hospitals, patients' menus and staff menus were discussed.

Sheffield RHB and Tutor Students' Hardships

Sheffield ANTC has suggested to the RHB that in addition to secondment of suitable nurses to take the tutor's course, grants-in-aid ought to be made when necessary for maintenance, so that applicants are not discouraged from taking the course by domestic or financial commitments.

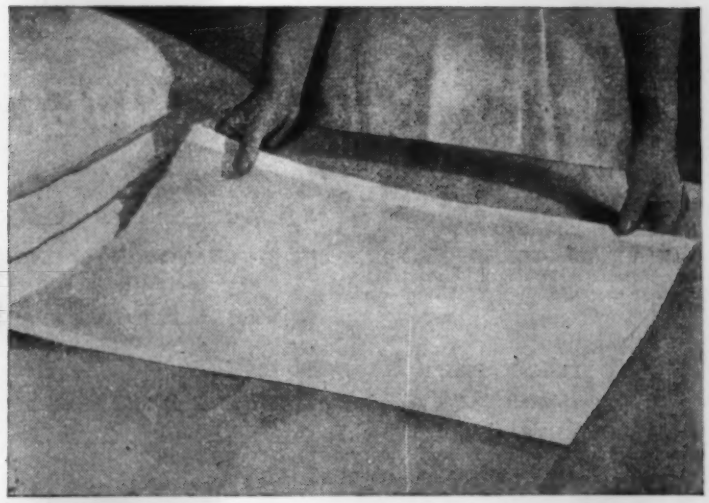
The chairman of the board is to take the matter up with the Ministry, with a view to help being given from Exchequer funds, but meanwhile the Finance Committee of the board has agreed that grants-in-aid should be made from non-Exchequer funds

ROBINSONS'

INCO-PADS

(DISPOSABLE INCONTINENCE PADS)

for home use



"Inco-Pads", originally supplied only to hospitals, are now also available for home use. Proved by extensive use in hospital wards, "Inco-Pads" prevent the soiling of bed-linen and reduce laundry costs.

They are invaluable in cases of incontinence. Made from highly absorbent cellulose wadding with soft non-woven fabric facing, "Inco-Pads" have water repellent paper backs.

DOCTORS AND NURSES AGREE that there's nothing more cheering than a nice hot cup of Bovril

They agree, too, on Bovril's usefulness for patients, particularly in cases of convalescence from serious illness or major surgery.

Bovril is a great help in promoting good appetite, and a powerful stimulant of gastric secretion. Bovril is also a useful source of vitamins of the B complex, Riboflavin and Niacin, and of hæmatinic factors–folic acid and Vitamin B_{12}.

COLLEGE APPEAL

(i) for the Nation's Fund for Nurses

Our list this week includes a generous donation from a Student Nurses' Unit and we have received from this Unit a similar donation for some years now. When one is young it takes a good deal of imagination to visualize the needs of an older generation. We appreciate very much the thought and imagination shown.

Welsh Board Appeal—Enthusiastic Support

A further cheque of £100 has arrived to swell the fund for the Welsh Board appeal of the Royal College of Nursing. This has been raised by Gorseinon Hospital; the fact that it is quite a small hospital of some 68 beds make this effort all the more encouraging. Large or small, the Welsh hospitals are evidently giving practical effect to their enthusiasm for the formation of a Welsh Board of the College: witness the splendid result of £3,000 collected by Swansea Hospital already reported (Nursing Times, January 6, 1961).

BANGOR BRANCH DINNER. Members with their guests, who included the mayor and mayoress; Miss Benson, Northern Area organizer; Miss N. L. Thomas, Council member for Wales; Dr. Dorothy Lancaster, president, and Miss Mary Hughes, chairman.

The Nursing Times Lawn Tennis Challenge Cup and replicas presented to individual players.

NURSING TIMES TENNIS TOURNAMENT

◄ This is the present silver cup which is now held by St. George's Hospital. The replicas are given to the four players representing their hospital in this competition for London hospitals which the Nursing Times has sponsored annually since 1912 and which has been interrupted only by the two wars. This is the ninth cup offered by this journal, the previous eight cups being won outright.

Here is the time-table for this year.

The first round must be completed by May 20. The winners will be joined in the second round by the 17 hospitals that have drawn a bye; the second round must be played by June 10. The third round must be played off by June 24, the fourth by July 8 and the semi-finals and final by the end of July. Further details of semi-finals and final dates will be published later. Club secretaries should get in touch with their opponents as soon as possible to fix matches. The hospital drawn first in each pair has the choice of ground in the first round; in the following rounds the meeting place is by agreement. The Nursing Times arranges the semi-final and final matches on neutral ground.

In Parliament

Shortages and Recruitment Mr. Charles Howell (Birmingham, Perry Barr) asked the Minister of Health on April 17 how many hospitals and how many wards were closed, and how many beds were out of use through lack of nursing staffs, in each regional hospital board area at the latest convenient date; and what steps he proposed to take to obtain the necessary nursing staffs for the new hospitals he intended to build in the future.

Mr. Powell.—Figures are available only in terms of 'beds unused for lack of staff', that is, staff of all kinds. The new hospitals will largely be in replacement of old; but the numbers of nursing staff continue to increase steadily.

The following details were circulated of beds unused for lack of staff (England and Wales) at December 31, 1959.

Mr. Howell also asked the Minister for the numbers of vacancies for ward sisters, nurses, and nursing auxiliaries, respectively, in each regional hospital board area at the latest convenient date; and if, in view of the situation, he would set up a committee to take evidence, both in private and in public, to ascertain the reasons why the nursing profession was not attracting sufficient recruits, and why so many nurses left the profession.

Mr. Powell.—I understand that a total of some 21,000 vacancies for hospital nurses of all grades was current at offices of the Ministry of Labour at December 31, 1960. A breakdown of this figure by regional hospital areas is not available. The number of staff in post at September 30, 1960, was the highest ever recorded, and I see no reason for a special inquiry into recruitment and wastage.

Miss Janet Filby, whose appointment we announced last week, is general superintendent and secretary of the Ranyard Nurses as well as of the Ranyard Mission.

HOSPITAL AND OTHER NURSING VACANCIES

ST. PETER'S, ST. PAUL'S AND ST. PHILIP'S HOSPITALS

(In association with the Institute of Urology)

APPOINTMENT OF MATRON

Owing to retirement, the Board of Governors invite applications for the post of Matron of the three hospitals (132 beds), vacant on the 31st August, from suitably qualified candidates able to show ability in nursing administration; experience of urological nursing will be an advantage.

The duties will include supervision of the post-graduate nursing courses in urology and of the development of nursing techniques in connection with research projects. The successful candidate will also play an active part in the planning and development of a new hospital.

The salary is £877-£1,034 a year, less £265. A flat in a modern block, close to the hospitals, is provided, which will be furnished to the Matron's requirements.

Applications, stating education, experience, age and qualifications, with the names of three referees, to the House Governor, St. Peter's Hospital, Henrietta Street, W.C.2, by the 10th May, 1961. (2387)

COLINDALE HOSPITAL
COLINDALE AVENUE, LONDON, N.W.9

APPOINTMENT OF MATRON

The above appointment will shortly become vacant following the retirement of the present holder, and applications for the vacancy are invited.

The hospital has 265 beds and provides for the medical and surgical treatment of tuberculous and non-tuberculous chest conditions, and for ear, nose and throat surgery. The E.N.T. Unit is under reconstruction; new theatres have been provided and considerable developments in the ancillary services are planned. Applicants, therefore, should have good general administrative experience and be prepared to co-operate in the further development of the hospital as circumstances dictate.

The salary scale is £1,013 x £37 (3) x £42 (2)—£1,208 p.a., with a deduction of £285 p.a. in respect of board residence, etc.

Applications, giving age, qualifications, administrative experience and names and addresses of three referees, to be sent to the Group Secretary, Hendon Group Hospital Management Committee, Edgware General Hospital, Edgware, Middlesex, not later than 29th April, 1961. (2437)

For soothing and healing disorders of the skin

When external causes have made the skin sore, inflamed, dry or cracked, Dettol Ointment brings relief. It cools and soothes irritation and softens hardened skin. Meanwhile, the active principle of Dettol antiseptic embodied in Dettol Ointment sinks deep into the skin tissue, hastens healing and guards against secondary infection. Dettol Ointment cools and heals napkin rash, soothes cracked or hardened nipples, and is recommended for urine rash, boils, bed sores, chapped hands and all minor affections of the skin.

'You're always on the move, nurse!'

And she's right—nursing demands the expenditure of a great deal of energy. This can be measured (by compiling rates of oxygen consumption using a portable respirometer), and then expressed in terms of Calories per minute. For instance, as typical examples:

BEDMAKING
consumes 5·4 Calories per minute

POLISHING
consumes 4·8 Calories per minute

PLAYING WITH CHILDREN
consumes 3·5 Calories per minute

By comparison—

A MAN BRICKLAYING
consumes 4·0 Calories per minute

Most of this energy comes from meals: but often, when you need energy quickly you're far too busy to have a good meal. It's then that Lucozade is best. This golden, sparkling drink is convenient to take, acceptable at any time, and raises the blood glucose level quickly. Lucozade is as right for you as it is for your patients, when you need a quick energy lift. Remember that the next time you see someone in your ward enjoying Lucozade.
